Third Quarter 2021 Weather(ly) Report
October 2021

As the ebb and flow of pandemic life eased with an increase in worldwide vaccinations and economic reopening, the Delta variant, accessibility of vaccines and impact by region varied dramatically. Options for hybrid work, in-person education, travel and entertainment caused businesses and governments to adopt a variety of policies and implementation depending on city, county, or country. Both recovery and concerns in economic activity caused volatility to increase during Q3. Globally, central banks began to raise rates or ease monetary policies. U.S. dollar strength reached a high not seen since Fall of 2020, and China's Evergrande debacle reverberated globally. Concerns in China and comparison to Long Term Capital Management worried investors.

The S&P 500 has risen six straight quarters even with the impact of a 4.65% decline during the month of September. Large-cap growth stocks that prospered during the pandemic had their worst month since March 2020. Year-to-date, the S&P500 was up 15.91% with growth and value stocks returning 16.43% and 15.30% respectively. Mid-cap stocks rose 15.17% with their small-cap counterparts up 12.40%. Global (including US) returned 11.12% and international stocks 5.90%. As the Federal Reserve spoke of easing bond buying, the yield curve steepened. Subsequently, 30-year fixed mortgage rates rose above 3% putting high valuation stocks under pressure.

Supply chain discussions swirled around the globe. How would resurging demand in certain sectors, like travel, service, housing, and autos, be able to go from zero to 100mph overnight? Did the company own their own suppliers (like Pepsi) or rely on container ships stuck in ports with a lack of dock workers? Juggling supply chains with price elasticity and the probability that inflation is transitory became the new normal for central banks, CEOs and small business owners, creating additional weight on top of regulations, health and safety, and oscillating demand. Inflation concerns were also stoked as oil prices reached a 7-year high.

Weatherly continues to focus on appropriate individual portfolio asset allocation, reduction of concentrated positions and managing tax implications while optimizing asset location and liquidity needs with philanthropy and gifting. We continued to deploy our two-pronged approach to equity investments investing in new opportunities in growth areas coupled with dividend-oriented value companies. Per the WSJ U.S. households added $13.5 trillion in wealth in the last year. Most Americans paid off credit card debt and refinanced mortgages at historically low interest rates. Proposals to estate and tax changes continued to circulate the House and Senate, not making huge headway as debt ceiling debates continued to push against deadlines. Long-term infrastructure packages became a short-term bargaining chip. Clients of Weatherly continue to have significant planning conversations with their team of professionals surround gifting, beneficiaries, intra-family loans, Roth conversations and many other unique opportunities. We welcome these continued dialogues with clients to design a plan appropriate at this juncture for your family, business, and community.

We are all living in an extremely unique time in history. Let's remember to hurry up and slow down and connect as appropriate to have impact on those around us. "Never be so busy as not to think of others." - Mother Teresa

The WAM Balanced Composite represents actual portfolios utilizing strategic asset allocation with both equity and fixed income components. The fixed income component for individual portfolios underlying the balanced composite have allocations tailored specifically for that account and client, and varies between 5% and 90%, whereas the Blended Benchmark is 50% S&P 500 Total Return and 50% Merrill Lynch 1-3 Year representing an average of a 50% Equity and 50% Fixed Income benchmark allocation in the Composite.
